Social Networking Safety

Tweens, teens and adults have flocked to so-called social networking sites including MySpace, Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn, just to name a few. So much so, that kids who don't have a profile are becoming the exception to the rule. Uncle Joe has his resume posted online in hopes of landing a better job and Grandma is on Facebook so she can keep track of everyone's activities. However, there may be others out there watching your activities with more sinister intentions. In addition to "Stranger Danger", there are a host of other potentially harmful consequences when children and adults ignore safety online.

Most social networking sites have privacy settings that allow you to restrict who has access to your profile and website information. Choose one that allows you to filter out anyone you don't specifically give permission to. Do not allow anyone you don't know to have access to your information.

Kids and young adults on the Internet often fail to recognize the danger, taking everyone at face value. Explain to them that on the "Anonymous Web" there ARE predators pretending to be friends. If you don't personally know who you are talking to, don't assume they are telling the truth.

Tell them not to give out any personal information that may allow someone to find them, such as date of birth, their school, sports teams they belong to, address or phone numbers.

From The Desk Of Commander Jeff Walther

With the beginning of the New Year, I thought it a fitting time to formally introduce myself to the citizens of South Scottsdale. As your new Commander, I assumed the helm of District 1 on December 6th with the departure of Commander Scott Popp to our Investigations Division. Scott was an exceptional steward of the community and I am eager to pick up where he left off.

I simply could not be more excited to oversee patrol operations in District 1 as this has been my home throughout my fifteen year career with the Scottsdale Police Department. Since coming to SPD in July 1994, I have been fortunate to have worked in District 1 as a Patrol Officer, Patrol Sergeant, Patrol Lieutenant and now the District Commander. As a result of the extensive time I've spent in this District, I am well versed in both the criminal activity that faces our community, and the dedication of our citizenry to partner with us to combat that activity.

Over the last month I have been able to connect and re-connect with many community activists, Block Watch Captains, business owners and citizen's living in District 1. I look forward to meeting many more over the next several months and in positively impacting the quality of life in District 1.

Photos should also be closely guarded, as they can be easily manipulated. Remember, child pornography is illegal, even if it is sent by the child. Minors should never comply with a request to send provocative photos of themselves and NEVER go to meet someone they met online unless they take a parent or guardian. Predators like easy prey, talk to your children about what to do if they are approached.

Be aware that anything you post NEVER completely goes away. Even if you remove it, there may be saved versions of it out in Cyber-land that can come back to haunt you at any time. Is it something you wouldn't want your grandmother, your college recruiter, your boss or future boss to see? Then don't post it on the Internet.

Parents are responsible for what their child is doing online. Does your child let you view their profile? Does it look harmless enough and "clean"? Are the privacy settings correct? How many other profiles might they have that they don't tell you about and wouldn't want you to see? The old saying, "It's 10 o'clock, do you know where your children are?" takes on a whole new meaning on the Internet. There are many software programs that allow parents to record and review every keystroke on a computer.

In addition to the personal hazards, computers themselves can become victims to unscrupulous predators on the Web. A "friend" sends you a cute video to watch. When you click on the link it says you must download a new version of the "player" to see it. With that download you also get malware that infects your computer. The original email wasn't from your friend after all, it was a virus that had infected their computer and gained access to their contact lists.

Malware is short for Malicious Software and it is designed to infiltrate or damage a computer system without the owner's informed consent.

A strictly for-profit category of malware has emerged in spyware. Programs are designed to monitor users' web browsing, display unsolicited advertisements, or redirect affiliate marketing revenues to the spyware creator. Spyware programs do not spread like viruses; they are, in general, installed by exploiting security holes or are packaged with user-installed software, such as peer-to-peer applications (those "cute little" apps through social networking sites).

Anti-malware software programs can be used for detection and removal of malware software that has already been installed onto a computer. This is different from, and should be used in addition to, a reliable anti-virus program. Don't allow yourself to become a victim through information theft on your computer.

In the end, each person must decide how much information they are comfortable with having out there in the world. With a lot of caution, the right tools and some common sense, interacting with others on social networking sites can be safe and fun for everyone.
